SERMON INFO

fearLESS

Lamentations tells us the mercies of God are "new every morning." That is good news. But the bad news is that right alongside those daily mercies is a daily unwelcome guest. FEAR. Fear of the unknown. Fear of failure. Fear of dying. Fear that whatever I did yesterday made no difference in the world. Fear of my spouse leaving me. Fear of not being enough. Fear of what's next. Fear of the world falling apart.

No matter how many times we've defeated it, fear seems to have infinite power to reinvent itself. Like the weeds that come every spring, we don't know precisely where they will sprout, but we know they are there, lurking under the soil of our hearts, ready at a moment's notice to take over our minds and hearts and send us into frenzied panic. Fear is real. And so too must be our defense against it.

For the next few weeks, we will engage in an important series called fearLESS. Jesus talks about the subject a great deal, precisely because there is quite a bit to learn. Each week we will look at one particular fear and talk about practical ways to deal with it. Today as we kick off this series on Easter, we will look at how the resurrection sets us free from our fear of death.

Questions for Reflection & Discussion

- Do you like Zombie movies? Why or why not?
- How has death been removed from our world today?
- How does a lack of attention to the devil impact one's walk with Christ?
- What helps you cope with the reality of death?
- What is something from which you've been set free, but still makes you live like you are in bondage?
- How would the resurrection shape the daily life of believers?
